TV COMMENTARY

By John Smiley

THE LONE RANGER of the 1970s is Kung Fu, which comes out of the blistering sun each week on ABC—not on a trusty steed and shooting silver bullets, but on bare feet and shooing away all comers with his style of oriental boxing.

EACH WEEK the contemplative monk Kwai Chang Caine walks into a different town and helps the local citizens solve their most pressing problem. At the end Caine walks off into the wilderness, while oldtimers like me listen for the hearty hi-ho-Silver of yesteryear.

ONE MAY never know the true identity of the masked rider of the plains, but Kwai Chang Caine is in reality one David Carradine, a trained dancer who has taken only a few kung fu lessons.

WITH THE HELP of the Lone Ranger, Caine, Batman and others, the networks might get most of their fall shows on the air the week of September 10. This was the date originally hoped for. Now that the four-month-long writer's strike is settled, program producers are moving rapidly to catch up.

A NIELSEN STUDY recently revealed that the network's nightly newscasts reach 56 million homes in an average month. This is approximately 86 per cent of our nation. Television news is our most used and trusted source of information. However, to be used properly, TV news should be digested in conjunction with news read in newspapers and news magazines
